Cultural Competence Survey Guide
Cultural competence is “a set of behaviors, attitudes, and policies that... enable a system, agency, or group of professionals to work effectively in cross cultural situations.”

Why measure cultural competence?

The DRIVE theory of change posits that racially inclusive implementation of DRIVE programs requires cultural competence across DRIVE leaders, key actors, and service providers. Research shows that culturally competent practices can improve access and use of services, participant satisfaction, and trust in service providers. We hypothesize that cultural competence of DRIVE actors will support authentic relationships with community members and improve DRIVE’s program outcomes.

What are we measuring?

The items in this survey assess cultural competence at the organizational level. For individuals who would like to assess their personal cultural competence, self-assessment tools such as the Cultural Competence Self-Assessment Checklist can assess your cultural skills, knowledge, and awareness and identify how you can engage more effectively in diverse environments.

The items in this survey assess DRIVE initiatives’ cultural competence across seven domains identified in the Culturally Effective Organizations (CEOrgs) Framework. The CEOrgs Framework is grounded in literature and draws on standards from national organizations. Originally designed for healthcare service providers, the CEOrgs Framework has been broadly adopted by nonprofit and people-serving organizations.

How often should we use this tool to measure cultural competence?

This survey can be administered to initiative leads on an annual basis. Since culture changes with time, cultural competence is a continuous learning process, and organizations can benefit from periodic reassessment. Ideally, this survey will be taken by multiple team members to compare results.

How was this survey developed?

A team of evaluation experts from the Central Valley Community Foundation and Sankofa Consulting conducted a literature review to operationalize cultural competence, identify domains, and identify existing surveys that assessed organizational cultural competence. A multitude of organizational cultural competence assessment tools exist, including two surveys that have been tested for validity/reliability:

- The Cultural Competence Self-Assessment Questionnaire ("CCSAQ," Mason, 1995)\(^6\) and the Consolidated Culturological Assessment Tool Kit (Ohio Department of Mental Health, 2003).
- Several other instruments, outlined in a review of organizational cultural competence assessments by Harper, et. al., 2006;\(^7\) contained tools that were not previously validated, but were useful to inform our survey development, such as the assessment developed by the Association of University Centers on Disabilities.\(^8\) We relied heavily on the Culturally Effective Organizations Framework, Organizational Assessment,\(^9\) which evaluates the seven domains of the CEOrgs Framework, described above.

New items were drafted only when existing items were not available. All survey items were reviewed by experts and were pre-tested on a small sample of individuals for readability, understanding, and acceptability.

Leadership, Data Collection, Staff Cultural Competence, and Workforce Diversity and Inclusion Items:

Policies and Procedures, and Community Engagement Items:

Note: Items 4-5, addressing policies and procedures, were loosely adapted from a policy scale in the Mason (1995) survey.

Language and Communication Items:

Analysis: Descriptive statistics will be reported on the percentage of initiative leads who responded agree or strongly agree to each item. Subscales can be created according to the CEOrgs Framework domains, shown above, and analyzed by subscale, or collectively as a cultural competence index.
